

COMMIT intends to increase commitment to the social dimension of higher education and support strategies for increasing attainment.

COMMIT

Committing to the social dimension in universities

This project builds on the work of a previous project - ALLUME, <http://allume.eucen.eu> - which developed three self evaluation tools to help universities reviewing their internal strategy for the implementation of a comprehensive and coherent Lifelong Learning University approach.

COMMIT will:

- review, refine and adapt ALLUME's three tools, adding new features to take on board a wider and clearer idea of the social dimension of Higher Education (HE)
- design and develop a new tool for monitoring attainment in HE and integrate these tools in HEIs management systems
- design and undertake a training event with input from external experts
- use the tools in 12 universities in 12 different countries to conduct a self evaluation
- undertake a transversal analysis of the reports from the use of the tools
- run 12 national active learning workshops, with groups of other universities and representatives from the relevant ministry
- run a European event with an active learning approach
- invite associate partners to host a visit from one of the experienced partners in their events

How to participate in COMMIT?
